Thursday's Service.

A grand day at Tabor. The attendance to-day exceeded all expectation, notwithstanding Thursday always ranks as a red letter day at Camp Meeting. It is estimated that the 9 o'clock mail deposited over 500 passengers, and the earlier trains nearly as many each, and enough lunch baskets were brought on the grounds, it would seem, to supply Dr. Tanner for a year. The 9 o'clock prayer meeting was attended by at least 1500 people, the largest attendance at any prayer meeting thus far.

The 10 o'clock services were held with as large a congregation assembled as on last Sunday, and commenced with a beautiful opening piece by the choir.

This was followed by 508th hymn. The reading of the 1st lesson found in 51st Psalm, and the second lesson found in John, 15th Chapter. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Loomis. The 521st hymn was then sung, and collection taken.

Rev. Thomas Smith preached from Hebrews, XIII, 20, 21.

SERMON.

These words constitute one of the most comprehensive and glowing petitions ever pronounced by human lips, or recorded by an inspired pen. While they contain a digest of the most important Christian truths, these words breathe the spirit of an exalted piety.

The speaker considered these words to be one of the grandest achievements of human intellect; in the epistle is already displayed the divine and kingly character of the Lord Christ.

The apostle had felt the divine and holy emotion which comes to the hearts of believers as he traced this divine epistle.

In the first place I will ask your attention to the apostle's pious wish in behalf of the Hebrews, "that they might be made perfect."

What is the meaning of the word perfect? Webster defines it "having all that is necessary," "completeness," "not defective." It must be observed that it is often remarked when we urge upon our people the importance of thus being made perfect in Christ Jesus, that we do not mean absolute perfection; we do not mean impeccability—the impossibility to sin that belongs to God alone.

It has been properly said that absolute perfection cannot be found even amongst angels. God alone in this sense of absolute perfection can be said to be perfect.

But while there is no possibility of being made so perfect in the present life that we shall not be liable to fall into sin again, as to be free from all human infirmity, or the possibility of falling into serious mistakes, thank God it is possible that we shall be made so complete in Christ that we shall stand before God perfectly accepted. It may not be possible that we shall always attain to that style of perfection which will save us from censorious remarks and severe judgments of our fellow men. Job's friends mistook him; they supposed that because he was afflicted, that he was the subject of adverse Providences and that therefore he must be a wicked man, and when they could not find a single overt act of sin they came to the conclusion that he must be guilty of secret hypocrisy; but though his friends misunderstood him God did not. So there is a possibility of our attaining to such a perfection as may satisfy our censorious and uncharitable fellow men. That may not measure up to the demands of the devil, but it will be satisfactory to the omniscient eyes of our gracious God. Few words have provoked more criticism that occur in Christian theology than this word "perfection," and were this the only place in Scriptures where the word occurred it might be proper for us to pause here and ask if there ought not to be some modification or amendment of the meaning of the term as it applies to human character. Whether it does not mean something far beneath what the term implies, as generally understood, with the explanations of it already given. But this is far from being the case; it is not the only place in the Scripture where this term, "perfection," occurs. It is found scattered throughout the Word of God in varied forms and different connections, so that there can be no mistake of its being an expression of Scriptural doctrine. It is recorded that "Enoch walked with God one hundred and twenty years." That he had this testimony, "that his ways pleased God." Now, when a man walks in sin and has an imperfect moral or religious character, his ways do not please God. We therefore infer that Enoch was, in God's estimation, what Job was—a perfect man.

God requires nothing of us that lies outside the limits of possibility. But God did say to Abraham, "Walk thou before me and be thou perfect," and Abraham so obeyed the divine command that he obtained the testimony that he was a friend of God.

A reference was also made to Ezekiel, 36th chapter, for further elucidation of this matter. Paul prayed for this blessing in behalf of his Hebrew brethren when he urged this upon them: "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see God." Many other texts were quoted by the speaker from the New Testament in proof that this perfection of character was attainable. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."—This is the first and great commandment, and in it are comprehended all the ethical teachings both of the law and the prophets.

This blessing was considered so rich, hallowed, and so sublime that when the apostle desired it for his Hebrew brethren—the best of all gifts—he invokes in their behalf, in the words of the text.

There are some who have claimed the impossibility of this thing by the force of any instrumentalities and agencies within our reach, and if we were dependent upon our own inherent ability or any natural powers of our own to attain to this high state of religious character and enjoyment we might utterly despair. When we consider the lapsed and weakened condition of human nature how this depravity of our nature has been intensified by false philosophies, by corrupt examples and by unholy habits, we might naturally conclude that it was utterly unattainable in the present life, and we do not wonder that many have concluded that no approach to a higher standard of Christian character was possible, and so it would be if we were left to our own resources. But though we recognize all the difficulties in the way we see that it is gloriously possible for the necessary forces are engaged for the accomplishment of the great work. These forces which are recognized in our text for this work are two in number. First is the blood—the blood of the everlasting covenant.

By the everlasting covenant we understand the covenant of grace, which the apostle called the new and better covenant, in contradistinction to the old covenants of works; when God made his original covenant with man it was "Do this and live," but God very soon discovered as he knew when man had fallen that he was incompetent to do what the law demanded. And if we had been left to the results of the old covenant not one soul of our race would have even been able to rise to the glories of the better world, and therefore God devised the new covenant adapted to the changed condition of man, to the weakened moral nature—a covenant which should not require him to perform all the law required without a single breach of its command. In this covenant Christ's royal life and death furnished the ground of honorable pardon for every son that comes to God in the name of Jesus. Humbling himself and acknowledging his condition and seeking divine mercy, not claiming that he is worthy but acknowledging his utter demerit. It is called the everlasting covenant because it is not like the old covenant, to be disannulled, to pass away to become effete; it will never be superseded, 'til the blasts of the archangel's trumpet shall announce the termination of time and the winding up of the great drama of human history. But it is called a new and better covenant and the blood of the covenant because its blessings were purchased with blood divine. "Christ died for the just and for the unjust" we are justified, we have redemption through his blood. This covenant was sealed with blood, it is ratified with blood and it is by the power of the blood and faith in the virtue and merit of that blood that we are to be saved.

But the second power or agency recognized in the text for the accomplishment of this work is the sanctifying spirit, "The God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus." The spirit is represented under the figure of a dove—the symbol of peace and the holy spirit is recognized as the person in the Trinity that is especially, peculiarly and emphatically "the God of peace." He brings peace to our souls when by his witnessing power he testifies to the fact of our adoption into the divine family. Wherever he arrives it brings comfort, smooths our pathway in life, this was the power the apostles recognized that brought our Lord Jesus from the dead. He was crucified in the flesh, but he was quickened by the spirit.

This is the great agent in the accomplishment of this work. If he could raise the dead humanity of the Lord Christ from the grave, can he not raise our dead souls to the new life of righteousness?

And now what is the design and purpose of God in this great work? It is not that we shall simply sit down and enjoy emotional raptures. It is not that enjoying the saving efficacy of the blood, giving us peace and purity for ourselves, we shall waste it upon ourselves. There is something more contemplative.

Christianity is an intensely practical thing; it is given to men to set them doing something, and when Christ, by the spirit, comes into a human breast and the blood is applied, and the sanctifying spirit renews our nature and fills with all the fullness of God, it is that we may do something.

That nature which exalts itself in emotional raptures is not that of which the Apostle speaks.

This being taken possession of by the spirit does not imply our having no will of our own except in the sense of being in harmony with God.

The practical result contemplated: That we should be made perfect in every good work to do God's will. The gracious sentiment that welled up from the apostle's awakened soul, when first saved by divine grace, when he was arrested on his way to Damascus, "Look: what wilt thou have me to do," was the master sentiment and feeling of his religious life, actuated him in his unparalleled labors, and nerved him for the wonderful achievement which he wrought in his life time.

There are some earnest and well meaning Christians, who have been greatly afflicted by some statements which have been made with this question of grace, and sometimes the modern poets compel us to sing words in order to keep up the poetical rhyme that are not exactly Scriptural. There have been some persons who speak of God's children saved by his grace, regenerated by his spirit as being in a merely justified state.

Now, I want to say there is no such thing in Christian experience as being merely justified. Every true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ must be a little sanctified. Every particle of religion that you have, my Brother, is sanctifying in its effects. All the religion of the Lord Jesus is holy religion, and if you have been justified by faith in Christ, then you have been regenerated by the divine spirit. Sanctification is but the completion of the work of regeneration, the same precisely in its nature, only different in its degree. Now, this is my first proposition. My second proposition is, that when all true believers are sanctified—there are many, many true believers that are not sanctified—are we not painfully conscious of the fact that there is work yet to be done that has not been accomplished? But we are pleading for the simple truth of the gradual development of the Christian character; you say no, not necessarily. If I am asked whether this work of God in the soul is progressive or instantaneous. I reply that it is either or both. If you claim that it must take so much time to accomplish it, I say that is unscriptural and untrue. That this work is not governed by the law of time at all, but is governed by the law of faith, "according to your faith it is done unto you." It is not necessary, that we shall go on growing for forty years in order to attain to it, it may be the work of to-day, this hour. There are some here that have been growing for years, and yet they feel that they have more before them, and the spirit within them grows stronger daily. Go on if you can do no better, if your faith will not possess the blessing now, don't backslide, and sit down, and say, "it is impossible of my ever making any advancement in this direction," but if there is no growth, there will be positive dwarfing. There are some of our brethren who sometimes start at this idea of being made perfect.

The speaker related an incident which occurred in his experience when a Brother had chided him for making a profession of sanctification; he showed the Brother that it was a simple process, and that he did not claim anything new, but only a greater degree of the spirit.

In closing his remarks, the speaker cautioned his hearers in their acceptance of this doctrine of sanctification to guard against a spirit of censoriousness, and fanaticism; this was set down as a temptation of the devil. He also claimed that afflictions were not the means of our being led to Christ, but were simply intended to draw our attention to the things of God, so that the spirit might have its perfect work.

The Evening's Service.

This can hardly be called a distinct and separate service, as prayer meeting succeeded meeting in the afternoon with scarcely an interruption. The immense crowd that thronged the grounds during the day scarcely seemed to diminish when the time for the 7:30 P. M. service arrived. The sun of declining day had dried up most of the moisture so that there was little difficulty in seating the audience. The service began by singing the 372 hymn, followed by prayer by Rev. M. Barrel, and after the 349 hymn was sung the Rev. G. H. Winans preached from 11 chapter, Luke, 13 verse: "If you then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

These words furnished an admirable view of God. We are no better than our ideas of God.

Some one had propounded the question of whether a community of atheists was to be preferred to pagans. The writer who advanced such a question had preferred such a community to one made up of superstitious devotees.

The erroneous views in regard to God was next commented on:

Happy is he who has heard and received the truth—it is coming out of darkness to light. We have also given us a broad and profound view of the worth of prayer, and the paramount object of prayer is the Holy Spirit. Our prayers for gifts which belong to the earth we must pray with a limitation, but when we pray for the gifts of the Spirit we know that the prayer is in accordance with God's will.

The mother prays for the life of her child and knows not that the child will bring her sorrow and trouble. We should learn to say in all such requests "God's will be done."

Men do not need another Bible to speak to them in a stronger manner, but another agency is needed and that is the Holy Spirit.

Considering the offices of the Spirit, the speaker said first it has an awakening power; it is also given to witness to our salvation.

A wicked man may think that he loves God because he has been so good to him, but he does not love his own conscience because he knows it searches the heart, nor his omnipotence because he knows it is directed against him. The Spirit is the means by which the love of God is shed abroad in the heart and that the wicked man does not seek to have.

The Spirit also removed all doubts and leads us into knowledge which is perfect. The Spirit teaches to pray. The preacher denied that the Spirit would work separate from the word of God; the one is necessary to lead us to the other. The Spirit is also a comforter, a comforter which is needed by us in our afflictions and trials of earth.

Many illustrations were recalled to prove the divine comforts which is found in times of great danger and trial.

The Spirit was also held to be the sanctifier—not that there was any more sanctity in the third person of the Trinity, but this was its peculiar office.

The speaker exhorted the unsaved in the congregation to seek this spirit now. The words quoted to-night answer all your objections. No earthly father can give you what God offers you to-night, and in view of the uncertainties of life, come and make your heart a temple for the indwelling of the Holy Ghost.

Rev. Mr. Loomis followed in an earnest exhortation.

Afternoon Service.

The shower which occurred just before the time for the regular afternoon service, caused some delay in the exercises. Hundreds of people sought refuge in both pavilions, and prayer meetings were held in each, with a larger attendance, doubtless, than could be seen on a fine day.

Scores of people sought a place in the Tabernacle and even upon the platform, so that when the service commenced at 4 P. M. there was a good audience assembled, which increased to a large one by reason of the cessation of the rain.

The service began with singing the 1033 hymn. Prayer was then offered by Rev. Mr. Hayes, followed by the 248 hymn, at the conclusion of which Rev. E. Clements, of Boston, preached from the text found in the 8th Psalm—"When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy hands, etc."

We think that the passage we have read as our text is very often misconstrued, and we think that if it were understood scepticism would find very many of its objections and criticisms removed.

Generally by readers of the Bible I think this passage is construed to impress man with a sense of his meanness and is used to produce a peculiar and we think unjustifiable humility. We understand that text to teach a proper self-respect if it were properly construed it would leave man to put a high value upon himself, because the Lord has put a high value upon him. It is easily shown. Who has not stood under the starry heaven at night and been filled with wonder as he gazed upon that splendid revelation whether he were the ignorant, the uneducated little child, or whether he were the thoroughly instructed astronomer.

The rays of the sun though it is ninety-three millions of miles away from the earth, yet the rays of light get in a few seconds. The nearest fixed star can only send its ray to the earth in three years, there are others visible to the naked eye whose light it takes centuries to reach the earth.

If it were possible for us to reach the most distant star that can be seen through the telescope then with a telescope just as powerful we would be able to see just as far off in the same direction other stars, and we could repeat this operation again and again and now those worlds that seem so small are many of them millions of times larger than the earth, so that it is difficult to conceive of their magnitude. Now, this system of stars we see by the naked eye or the telescope is a system which has a center, like the sun as the center of the solar system. As the planets move around the sun, so also stellar worlds, themselves magnificent suns, are moving around a central star, and this is but one of the infinite number of systems like itself.

And so the sceptic has often said, seeing that we human beings dwell here on this earth, which is one of the smallest of all the worlds beyond, we ourselves are such humiliating creatures of a day, it is absurd or ridiculous to teach or suppose that the Almighty maker of them all should ever condescend to notice us, as Christianity says he has noticed us, so they would try to compress us with a sense of our insignificance, and have us to grovel down in the darkness and dust with nothing within us to assert itself, and demand of us that we should rise. Now, look at this, if you please; this earth is a part of the heavens. If we could go to the moon we would see our earth shining in the heavens as the moon shines to us. Could we go to the sun, our earth would shine like a star in the firmament. It is part of that system in which he displays his wondrous wisdom and power, and it may be possible that this world, though so small in comparison with those mighty worlds, may be a sort of sanctuary; a place of peculiar importance and interest to Almighty God, as in the case of a man who has scattered all over the continent his furnaces or his workshops, or his ships may whiten every sea with their sails, he has down in South street an office, which is the centre of it all. This world may be a place in which God shall reveal that goodness, wisdom and power, and perfection of his, that he may make it such a place as this office of which I have spoken. If he is there enthroned, and there would reveal himself, then the dignity of a world is not to be measured by cubic miles. Now, if this earth is a part of the heavens, the laws which God has established are the same here as those more distant worlds. The speaker showed by reference to recent discoveries by the stereoscope that the constituent elements of those distant worlds were analogous to those of ours. Further, as this appearance of oneness to the earth to the rest of the heavens appears, we notice that man was placed on the earth to have dominion over it. It was to be a full dominion; just how magnificent that may have been in its development it is not possible for us to describe, but when the first pair were in the gardens, they themselves were magnificently superior to death, to sickness, and to all that disturbs life. It was not a dominion of an accident, nor a something which was independent of them, and concerning which they had no choice, they maintained that position through the exercise of the faculties, and the will which God had given them, and as long as they remained in communion with God, and intelligently executed it, and the forces of nature were subject to them. And the speaker went on to show that since the fall of Adam man has been losing that dominion over nature. There are remains of that divinity still remaining. But that serpent which caused the downfall is losing its dignity; while he held his dominion his image was sculptured on those works of art which are now found among the ruins of ancient cities along the Nile. We find them in Central America, where there are ruins which rivaled those of ancient Egypt in their magnificence of dimension. Then the power of the serpent was recognized; now he is naught. You notice that in the proportion of the ideas and principles of right conscience obtained man is regaining his dominion and his dignity. Not by the culture of the intellect does man rise, at least not by that alone, but when together with the education of the intellect, comes in the education of the soul—the soul receiving to itself as decisive authority the will of God, then does man as man resume his authority over nature. There comes in this idea God the true God as we know him in Christ. It would be easy to make comparison between the Jewish nation and others surrounding them. There was that in the very arts and sciences of

S. R. OSMUN, DENTIST, MORRISTOWN, N. J. I have great pleasure in presenting the testimonials of persons for whom I have done work in my line who are competent judges of thorough dentistry. S. E. Hedges, M. D.; Rev. J. K. Burr, D. D.; Rev. A. H. Tuttle are persons well known throughout the entire State. CHESTER, N. J., July 28, 1880.

Dr. S. R. Osmun: DEAR SIR:—I have not been able to see you since you extracted my teeth, and I take this opportunity of expressing my thanks to you for the professional skill and courtesy you manifested at that time. I had taken gas once before at "Headquarters in New York city and my impressions were unpleasant and its effects damaging to my health. As administered by you its results were perfectly harmless and very satisfactory, and I shall take pleasure in recommending to my friends not only your art in filling teeth but also a fearless use of your gas. Very respectfully yours, S. E. HEDGES.

Doctor S. R. Osmun has done work for my family in almost every branch of dentistry and I unhesitatingly pronounce it to have always been of the highest order. I have such confidence in the excellence of his work and his skill in execution as to sincerely recommend him to such of my friends as are suffering with troublesome teeth. A. H. TUTTLE. Hackettstown, N. J., July 28, 1880. Dr. Osmun has for a number of years done dentist work for myself and family and has invariably given full satisfaction. A master of the science of dentistry, he avails himself of all the recent appliances of the dental art and displays great skill and thoroughness in all branches of dental work. J. K. BURR, Trenton, N. J., July 26, 1880.

Camp Notes.

Notwithstanding the large audience assembled before the stand yesterday the basket collection amounted to only $18.30, a little less than half a cent to each man, woman and child in the congregation.

The Christian Herald, a periodical edited by Rev. M. Baxter, of London, and Mr. B. Aitkin, of New York, published at 63 Bible House, New York, lies before us. It seems to be full of good things and well worth the low subscription price.

David Campbell, Esq., is lying sick of a severe bilious attack at his cottage on the Circle. We all trust it is only a temporary confinement, as it would scarcely be possible to supply his place even for a time as superintendent of the grounds.

Mr. Campbell's condition was much improved by last evening. A day or two of rest will doubtless restore him to health and enable him to attend to his duties.

Who shall say Camp Tabor is not a strictly temperance place? We are informed that over 12,000 gallons of water are used each day. The old pump reminds one of a President at a levee—its hand is in a constant state of shake.

Much of the good which is accomplished during these meetings may be ascribed either directly or indirectly to the influence of the meetings held in Mrs. Fitzgerald's cottage, where, it may be said, there is always a meeting either for prayer or experience going on.—Yesterday nearly a score were seeking, and several were soundly converted, and the good work has gone on for two weeks with nearly the same results.

Rev. Mr. Gordon, in descending the steps from the stand yesterday tripped and fell to the bottom, striking his head against some object bruising himself so severely that he fainted from excess of pain. He was on the way to take the afternoon train, but his medical attendant was obliged to order him to remain quiet. A couch was extemporized for him in Epworth Hall, where he lay during the afternoon. He was feeling much better towards evening, and will doubtless recover fast.

Among the features of Mt. Tabor's exercises is the cornet playing of Mr. John Weller, leader of the Washington band. He is not only a correct performer but one who unites expression with artistic perfection. The majority of semi-professional cornetists find church music the most difficult of any they come in contact with, to perform, but Mr. Weller leaves nothing to be desired in any respect either for mechanical perfection or grasping the composer's idea.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held at Mr. C. Tonkin's cottage on Wednesday afternoon. The following officers and managers were elected:

President—Mrs. Rev. R. Vanhorne,
1st Vice-President—Mrs. Klotz,
2d Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Aber,
3d Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Rev. D. Lowrey,
Treasurer—Mrs. Rev. C. Coit,
Secretary—H. P. Bonsall.

Managers—Mrs. Rev. A. L. Brice, Miss H. Parmer, Mrs. Rev. J. Bryan, Mrs. Rev. D. Walters, Mrs. De Groot, Mrs. W. K. More, Mrs. R. Grant, Mrs. Vreeland, Mrs. J. W. Stevens, Mrs. Rev. T. H. Smith, Mrs. Rose, Miss M. Kitchel.

A resolution was passed in the Board to appropriate $40 annually for the support of an orphan, to be named for the President of the society, Margaret Livingston Vanhorne.

The monies paid into the society the past year amounted to $137.25, including $60 paid by Mrs. Rev. C. Coit for the support of a Bible reader. Fifty subscribers to the Heavenly Woman's Friend were also secured.

This year they hope to do better.

MRS. F. W. CARR

The Lower Orders of Creation.

BY BISHOP CLARK.

Let us see what may be learned from some of those inferior creatures who inhabit the world, and had their abode here long before man intruded upon their domain, and by his sins and follies made so much mischief there. In the department of mechanical art what have they taught us? We must take into consideration, in criticising what they have done, all the disadvantages under which they have labored. What would the human race have accomplished if they had not had the use of fire and been obliged to work without a single tool—even without hands? Well, these are the conditions under which what we call "the lower orders of creation" have toiled, and what have they brought to pass?

Beavers were the first dam-builders, cutting down trees, floating them down the stream, adjusting them to their place, filling in the crevices and curving the line of the dam, so that it might most effectually resist the pressure of the current.

Moles were the first tunnel-makers, anticipating our Hoosac and St. Gothard and Mt. Cenis perforations, and all without dynamite or steam.

Ants were the first architects and masons; laying out villages, compounding building material of sand and mud, erecting pillars, spanning them with arches, thatching the roof with straw, opening streets, throwing up barricades, bridges, walls, and doing most of the work in total darkness.

The ant, which is the most intelligent creature of its size in the world, was also the first carpenter—boring and chiseling his way into solid timber, and opening rooms there for his accommodation, with walls sometimes as thin as paper. A hundred or a thousand of these carpenters may be hard at work at the same time in the same log, and yet no one ever crosses the track of another, or ruptures the thin partition that separates him from his neighbor.

Bees built the first warehouses, and thus far stand unrivaled in combining the greatest amount of strength with the greatest economy of space. They deserve to hold the most honorable place, both as geometers and as patterns of industry. It is to be deeply regretted they are not perfect in their morals, and are inclined to get drunk whenever they have the opportunity.

Hornets were the first paper-makers, and produced about as fine an article as is manufactured in some of our mills at the present day, although it might need a little bleaching before it could be put upon the markets to advantage.

The spider and the silk-worm were the first spinners, and, with all our machinery, we have never been able to come near them in the thread-making line.

The birds were the first weavers, and considering what they had to work with, some of their performances compare favorably with the best products of our modern looms, and at any rate would wear better. There is one class of birds who are very respectable tailors, and did their own sewing and stitching ages before needles were invented or the sewing machine was thought of.

There are details of mechanical art in which these "lower orders" seem to have anticipated the work of man; but I must pass at once to another matter, and see what may be learned from them in the department of social life. The devotion of bees to their queen is almost equal to that of the old cavaliers to the house of Stuart. Flocks of birds in their flight and droves of wild cattle on the prairie follow their leader as faithfully as we go the way which our political leaders point out for us. There is, however, this difference—the presiding genius among these lower orders does not hold his office by election or hereditary descent, but in accordance with "the law of natural selection."

There are some remarkable stories told of the administration of justice among the inferior orders, and of what appeared to be a regular trial of the culprit, his conviction and subsequent expulsion from the community. Beavers, who have a good many human traits about them, are said to have been seen, on a moonlight night, holding such trials, but by what forms they are conducted, we do not know. I can only hope that they are not quite as tedious and uncertain as they are with us.

The lower orders have been a fighting people from the beginning, most frequently in the way of private and personal assault, but sometimes under the usual conditions of a regular campaign, such as we are accustomed to observe in our "glorious wars." And as it is with us, so it is with them—the victory is not always to the swift and strong—

A falcon, towering in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and killed.

The lower orders have also set us a bad example in their disregard of private rights. The spider crab looks out from the door of the snailshell which he has appropriated to his use with as much calmness and complacency as might be expected if he had bought his house in the regular way of business. The innocent little bird will steal the nest of its neighbor.

Notwithstanding all this, it would be unfair to deny that the inferior orders of creation, however readily they may be corrupted by association with man, are endowed with some eminent native virtues. The fidelity, loyalty, patience and self-denial of certain dumb-creatures is proverbial.

We often say of our own species, when he has done a very mean thing, that "he acts like a brute," whereas no brute is capable of any such meanness, and the comparison is a slander upon the lower orders of creation.

The reports circulated last week that Wesley Lake at Ocean Grove, had run out, was a miserable falsehood. Last winter there was a new dam built at the foot of the lake and it works admirably. Two weeks ago the rains were heavy but the gates were raised and a volume of water twelve feet by four feet went through like a miniature Niagara.

Can Ezekiel have had an eye to the coming bicycle in that vision where he saw "one wheel with one cherub and another wheel with another cherub"?

Robert Chapman, of 21 Milton street, Newark, writes: "For several years I have suffered excruciating rheumatic pains; hearing of your XX Camphor Cream, I tried it; the first day's application relieved me and in ten days use all pain had left me." Those afflicted with pain try it. Sold at 25 and 50 cents per bottle by the proprietors, Vought & Killgore, Dover; Newark a agency at Smith & Bell's, and all Morristown druggists.
